

Primary Prevention Workshop

Purpose

This session is designed to support community groups, organisations and government to develop and implement primary prevention strategies and initiatives. Gendered violence is a national public health issue that requires a strategic and evidence-based response. Primary prevention programs seek to specifically address the underlying, gendered drivers of violence against women. The workshop is focussed on partnering with other practitioners to innovate and plan unique solutions to an otherwise complex and multilayered issue. It will involve identifying stakeholders and participants; assessing readiness, assets and strengths; determining the setting and mechanisms for change; creating a plan and community of practice with other participants.

Delivery

4 hours face-to-face.

Learning Outcomes

1. Design a primary prevention activity for your group, community or organisation
2. Assess readiness for change and design approaches to influence community values and attitudes to violence
3. Develop strategies to counteract resistance and challenges
4. Identify key stakeholders, settings and actions
5. Develop your implementation plan
6. Create your community of practice
