

Community Ally Network (CAN)

The Community Ally Network (CAN) is a peer-support program aimed at empowering women and influencing change in rural and remote Queensland. Community Allies play an important role in responding to violence by promoting safety and encouraging women to seek help.

Allies also participate in primary prevention activities to address gender inequality and attitudes to violence in their local community.

CAN is currently recruiting interested community members. If you live in a rural, regional or remote community in Queensland and you have an interest in supporting and promoting women's health, we would love to meet you.

Allies are volunteers who have a discrete, peer-support role OR a public advocacy role in their community. They have the guidance of WHQ staff, local services and the Women's Health Information Line.

The team at Women's Health Queensland provide face to face and phone counselling, advocacy and referral, community, and professional education. They also host programs aimed at supporting the prevention of violence against women.

"Our vision is that all women have safe and inclusive communities in which they are resourced to live their best lives. Our purpose is to advance the health and wellbeing of all Queensland women."
